The Butlers

The Butler House on Grand is a grand 6,000 plus square foot English Tudor, which was built in 1923. Robert and Edith Butler built this home, and raised their children here, with no fanfare. Meanwhile, Robert's brother Earl found immediate nationwide fame when he built The Butler Mansion on Fleur (a house dubbed "the most modern house"). The Butler brothers never spoke to one another, shortly after moving to Des Moines. That said, we personally adore the beautiful traditional details to the Grand Butler, over the post-century modern design exhibited in the Fleur Butler. And while both brother's houses were for sale at the time that we purchased this diamond in the rough, we are optimistic about making Robert's home more infamous than Earl's.

The Butler House on Grand transferred out of the Butler name due to foreclosure. Eventually the property was purchased by a gentleman who owned the adjoining building, which is now The Parkview condominiums (hence, no back yard or parking next to our property!). After a time, The Butler House on Grand was run as a college dormitory for Des Moines University students (which explains why the hall light cannot be shut off). However, this home has been run as a bed-and-breakfast since Clark and Lauren Kernan-Smith purchased it in 1999. It is not only renowned for its beauty and elegance, but also for the care and attention that the Smith's paid to their guests. We hope to continue that tradition, and honor the Smith family.

We are still researching more about The Butlers on Ancestry.com. Please be patient with us. In the interim, read the enclosed civil lawsuit between the two aforementioned Butler sons.

An Incredible Story of Love and Loss: The Moores

Your hosts, the Moores, first met when Sheryl was 11 and Jeremiah was 10. It was love at first sight; they immediately became boyfriend and girlfriend. Sheryl's middle-school friends teased her for dating an elementary "baby." However, she thwarted the idea of breaking-up; her love interest had a foot-tall mohawk and rode a skateboard! Plus, he had given her her very first kiss: a real kiss (and at Rice Elementary, on the monkey bars!). She was so confident of their imminent marriage that she took to writing combinations of her future name throughout her school notebooks.

She was confident that their love would endure all.

And then, her family moved away. She forgot about Jeremiah Paul Moore. For a while.

Many years later, Sheryl was a single mother of three babies, with no child support coming-in. Her oldest child, AJ (short for Alexander, Junior), was born with a congenital birth defect that required surgeries nearly every year (unilateral cleft lip and cleft palate). Her middle child, Alexis, was loving, but sassy. Baby Aaliyah was just a year old, and she was a handful too. Sheryl couldn't imagine being any busier, or any more stressed. She had tried to leave her police officer husband twice before, but the childcare was too costly. She secretly was planning to leave her husband (again), the first African American officer in his force, once she had enough money saved. Each time she tried, and failed, because she found out she was pregnant again. After baby number three, she opted for a tubal ligation; ensuring that her plans to leave wouldn't be infinitely extended. Every day was unhappy; time slowly passed- until she couldn't wait any longer. She decided that her husband's behavior was unacceptable, regardless of the depravity and life of destitution that stood ahead of her. Divorce could not come soon enough. And when the marriage ended, she wept in relief.

She was 25 and finally single, having fun being "free" for the first time in her life. She was finally free of her controlling mother; free of her military husband. It did not matter that she was caring for three kids, ages five and under, all by herself. She was FREE!

While her ex-husband was taking his very first visitation with her babies, her thoughts frequently wandered to her children. That said, she was also having the time of her life.

During one evening of that week of visitation, the former Mrs. Betts sat across from a middle school friend, at a bar called "Daytona's." Her friend, nicknamed 'Cookie,' said his name, while in conversation with someone she didn't know. "Jeremiah."

Wait- did you just say, 'Jeremiah?' As in Jeremiah Moore?"

Cookie responded, "No, girl. He's gone. He left Des Moines a long time ago."

Too bad, she thought. She wondered what he was up to now. Was he married? Did he have children? She said a quick prayer, hoping that he was okay, and continued her evening as usual. A couple of days passed.

And then her life changed. Forever.

Two days later, Sheryl was at the Iowa State Fair with her best friend. That is when she saw him. The hottest man she had ever seen in his life. She caught his eyes, as he chatted with a buddy. While she didn't recognize the hottest man alive, there was a familiarity to his smile. That smile with the dimple. It had to be the most charming smile she had ever seen! Instantly, she felt her heart beat ten times harder; ten times louder. She was intimidated but knew she would kick herself if she didn't at least try to speak with him. Would he reciprocate? She wasn't sure, but slammed some courage juice, and declared to her best friend- "See that guy, right there?" she pointed across the dance floor. "That is the man that I am going to spend the rest of my life with."

"The one with the red and white checkered shirt?" she asked. Sheryl nodded with a smile.

"Oh, girl. He is so out-of-your-league!" her (supposed) best friend replied.

"Watch me," Sheryl replied, accepting the challenge, and passing her beverage to her former wing woman.

She sauntered confidently across the dance floor, in the most romantic area of the state fairgrounds- The Budweiser (Bud) Tent. She continued to study him, take in his laugh, memorize his smile. And then, she stood less than three feet from him.

She waited patiently for his friend to stop the conversation. The entire time she was waiting for a lull, this gorgeous man continued his charming smile, and locked eyes with her. While it seemed an hour since she had crossed the floor, and stood at his gaze, it was mere seconds. Then, the conversation ended.

She stared deep into hot guy's eyes. "God as my witness, I have never seen a more beautiful man in all of my life! I have to know your name!"

"Jeremiah," he replied with that smile.

In a moment she felt her life flash in her mind's eye. How many guys can there be, in Des Moines, Iowa, about her age, named "Jeremiah?!"

Without uttering a word, she grabbed him by the back of his head, and gave him a wanting kiss. "You are the first boy I ever kissed," she declared.

"Wait a minute- what is your name?" he asked in disbelief.

"Sheryl," she responded.

"Sheryl Sundberg?!? Where have you been all of my life?!?"

"Well, I moved away, went to college, met a guy, got married, had three kids, got divorced, and now I am standing at the Iowa State Fair, in front of you," she answered.

"You've got three kids?!?" he countered, in skepticism. She looked young, very young, and every bit the ordinary young 20-something single gal.

She thought for a moment. Her own mother had been a single mom with three kids for 24 years at that point. Her mother blamed Sheryl (and her siblings) for being the reason her boyfriends always ran-off. Should she risk disclosing something that would make hot guy disappear before she even had the chance to get to know him again?

"Yes, I do" she replied, fearful of his response.

"I can't wait to meet them!" he responded with a smile.

And while she fully expected that she wouldn't see him again, after that night, she held hope in her heart. After all, why would God bring these two kids back together, after 13 years apart?

Not long after, Jeremiah proposed to Sheryl on Virginia Beach. He had asked her father for her hand, before driving out to visit her family. Almost immediately, they began trying for a child of their own. Having his own kids was important to Jeremiah, and Sheryl was open to having more blessings. The couple began their fertility quest with their doctor's suggestion of in vitro fertilization. It was filled with a grueling regimen of pills and shots for Sheryl, samples for Jeremiah, and tens of thousands of dollars spent out of both of their pockets. But their desire for a child of their own prompted the couple to try, and fail, to have children of their own on three separate rounds of assisted fertility. After many years, and five babies lost, the Moores gave up. They bought an Italian Greyhound puppy; Pepperwinkle would become their baby.

With the in vitro in the rearview mirror, and bluer skies ahead, the Moores focused on life with their three children. Sheryl's ex dropped out of the picture. The kids became involved in band, show choir, sports, and dance as they entered middle school and high school. Both Sheryl and Jeremiah were content with their lives. Sheryl praised God for the hellish childhood she had endured. She had three wonderful kids, who were good human beings! She had the best marriage of anyone she knew. She loved her job so much that she didn't even consider it work! And Jeremiah's general contracting business kept him fulfilled, while supporting the demands of Sheryl's young, growing business. They were comfortable with their lives and making plans to build a grand home on a six-acre lot nearby. Their lives and their family were perfect.

And then, IT happened. The terrible, no good, very bad day.

It had been a long summer day. The Moore's son, AJ Betts, had come to surprise Sheryl at work, with his partner-in-crime, his younger sister. Their mother's office was just a mile from home, and Sheryl needed a ride to pick-up her convertible (after being serviced). The day seemed unremarkable. The kids were fighting, but she was tired. So tired, that when she got home, she just laid in her bed while recounting the day's events for her husband. Thank goodness the summer is almost over, she thought. "I can't take many more days like this."

Her son entered the room, distraught. He had just returned home from work. Show choir practice earlier had been a drain on his psyche. He had to unload, "The kids from school are telling me that I am going to hell, for being gay." He was the frequent brunt of bullying from the kids at his school. While he was kind, and uber-friendly, the kids would not let him be. He didn't even have a boyfriend; yet the flamboyance drove the bullies on. If he weren't being called "Gay J," or "faggot," they were making fun of his lisp or calling him a "n•gger." His mother gave-up.

"Do you want me to transfer you to another school, AJ? I'll do it in a heartbeat."

"No," he responded, in defeat. "I'm pretty sure it isn't okay to be gay anywhere." He hung his head. Sheryl's deeply empathetic heart hurt for him. She wanted to get up, give him a hug, and tell him how very much she loved him- how he was the most important thing in her life. But she was just so tired. She couldn't even will herself to get out of bed.

Later in the evening, the Moores decided to get dinner to-go from a new restaurant nearby. They invited all the kids to come along. Yet, AJ declined, and Aaliyah felt sick. The two stayed behind, while Jeremiah, Sheryl, and Alexis left. Little did they know that their family would never be the same again.

Not long after, Sheryl got the call. Aaliyah had found AJ. Dead. He had taken his life, shortly after writing the bible verse, Matthew II: 28-30, on his notebook paper. A nearby note scribbled-out words that Sheryl could not reconcile with her beloved only son: ugly, hated, stupid, never be loved. The bullies had won. The Moores were told that AJ was the 14th suicide in ten years at that high school; a school that had the highest rate of suicide in the nation. How could they not have known?

Despite their hours-long effort to revive AJ, he passed. He had opted to be an organ donor, just six months before, when he applied for his driver's license. The doctors kept him on life support, in an effort to get his organs healthy enough to donate. Sheryl wouldn't leave his side. Besides- she was just so tired. She felt absolutely nauseous; unable to eat or drink. "This must be how it feels to lose a child" she thought. She had no idea.

The week was a blur of grief and trauma. The girls were zombies. Sheryl was in shock. Jeremiah was overcome with their loss. They walked through the motions of the funeral and burial. The bullies showed-up for everything, to express what "good friends" they were with AJ. Sheryl said a little prayer for each of them, as they hugged her at the memorial, the funeral, the burial, and the celebration of life. She wanted to slap them in the face, and their parents too; but she kept asking herself, "What would AJ do?" Love them. Forgive them. Pray for them.

So, she did.

And just a few days after the burial, the family travelled to Walt Disney World; on a family vacation that had been planned for months. It was the worst vacation of their lives, and in hindsight, they should have just skipped it. Everyone was miserable and struggling just to function. Food was an afterthought and caring for oneself was almost unimaginable. When Sheryl nearly lost her bladder, in an effort to deboard the flight connecting to Orlando, she shoved past everyone on the plane in reckless abandon. She didn't care. About anything. About anyone. She couldn't focus on anything outside of her loss.

Until she stepped out of the rental and vomited on the pavement in front of their condo management office. She immediately resolved what was happening- she was exhausted, nauseous, vomity.

She was pregnant.

She had not had a cycle of in vitro for years. She had just lost her son. Yet she knew that she was pregnant. A home pregnancy test confirmed her fear- how could she take care of the growing life inside of her, when she could barely take care of herself? She prayed, and asked God to spare the life of the baby. And he did.

She lost her only son, and gave birth to another, in less than eight months. Seventeen years apart. Jackson Alexander came into the world, as a miracle in more ways than one.

But her grief was overwhelming. She could not see outside of the tunnel she was trapped in. She went into menopause; she barely noticed. The side effects all blurred together now. She just was not herself. She did not think she ever would be herself. She had come to accept her fate when some bizarre menopause symptoms compelled her into an OB-GYN visit. When the nurse placed an ultrasound on her belly, something thumped at it, from within.

"What the h•ll was that!?" she asked in disbelief. The nurse turned the ultrasound screen to her face.

"What the h•ll is THAT!?" she screamed.

"I'd say you are about half-way through a pregnancy with another little boy," the nurse responded. And not long after, a second miracle occurred when Xander Paul entered the world.

The new family did their best to carry-on. They abandoned their house plans, and bought a 100-year old Victorian farmhouse on the outskirts of Waukee. Sheryl threw herself into planning the restoration, and decorating, while Jeremiah contributed the labor. They finished the attic in their beautiful homestead with intricate wood floors and stained-glass windows they imported from around the country. No detail was overlooked! And just as the Moores were re-siding their beloved escape from the world, the City of Waukee offered to purchase the property.

“Not interested” Mrs. Moore responded. “We have $300,000 into the restoration of this house, much more than the appraised value. This is our forever home, so thank you, but no thank you.”

What ensued can only be compared to legalized theft. The city took the Moore’s home through eminent domain. Although they, and their attorneys, fought for 11 months, they ultimately lost. Their beautiful home was not only torn down, but they were given hundreds of thousands less than they had put into it. To add insult to injury, the city had asked them to pay for the abstracting and titling that was required to transfer the house into their ownership, prior to the demolition. These politicians did not care what the family had been through; that this was their new home- untouched and untainted from the “terrible, no good, very bad day.”

They carried on. The Moores had dealt with much more than this. At least their daughters were alive; their new sons were healthy too! Jeremiah took care of the boys, while Sheryl kept running her business. Their oldest daughter became a nurse while their youngest daughter went into the military. In her spare time, Moore worked hard to change legislation that discriminated against the gay community; she had to be AJ’s voice. And her fight was rewarded when her Senator, Tom Harkin, helped her to pass legislation that allowed gay men to donate blood. They would not allow AJ to donate anything outside of his “lifesaving” organs upon his death (heart, lungs, kidneys, and liver). Now, AJ would be proud of her; she used her son's death to bring something good and meaningful to the world. She focused her efforts on changing other laws: her son's death would not be in vain! She would ensure that AJ Betts' name was never forgotten. As you read this, she is working with top universities to study cornea donation, and change legislation so that gay men will have the ability to donate their corneas. If they succeed, this will ultimately result in precious cornea donations that will save the sight of people all over the world!

4507 Grand Avenue, Des Moines, Iowa 50312

The Moores were no longer whole, but they had their blessings. Their lives had purpose. So, they picked-up, brushed-off their hardships, and did something crazy.

They put their money into purchasing, and restoring, the home that you are staying in now.

Insurance!

You might not know it, but Des Moines, Iowa is the annuity capital of the world!

I know what you are thinking- "What's an annuity?"

It is a type of insurance that promises you a retirement paycheck for the rest of your life, even if you live to be 150 years old. And Des Moines has the honor of having more insurance companies that offer annuities, domesticated here, than any other place in the world.

The (515) is also the second-largest insurance capital in the United States (behind Hartford, Connecticut).

In fact, it is the third-largest insurance capital in the world (London ranks at the top)!

Sheryl J. Moore, your host, is the nation's top expert on life insurance and annuity products. While she does not endorse any company or product, her market research firm has extensive relationships throughout the insurance industry. As a result, The Butler House on Grand is often blessed with guests from around the world, who happen to be insurance professionals.

That said, if you are gracing our doorstep during the course of your insurance business travels, we thought you may be interested in how to get ahold of some of the insurance companies that we call "neighbors."
